

Connecting Nonprofits
With Leading Universities

Partnership Application

The ChangeTheWorld.org Consulting Program connects underserved U.S.-based nonprofit organizations with experienced business students— the program is administered through a partnership between the Center of Social Value Creation at the Robert H. Smith School of Business at the University of Maryland and Grassroots.org. Together, we seek to increase the network of student-driven pro bono consulting experiences by building a network of partner universities and supporting their efforts. Existing partners include Georgetown University, George Mason University, University of Virginia, Drexel University, and Loyola University of Chicago.

We are now accepting applications for schools to join the partnership initiative starting in the Spring of 2012. Please answer the following questions completely to the best of your abilities.

- 1) Describe your institution's history of providing consulting services to non-profits and/or social ventures. Include number of organizations served, years in place, application process, structure of student teams, and any other pertinent information. If you will be creating a new program, let us know too.
- 2) Who is the team that will be serving as the primary managers of the non-profit consulting program at your school? Include resumes and describe relevant experiences/any other pertinent information.
- 3) What are the most important needs of your program, and how do you hope a partnership with the ChangeTheWorld.org will help you meet those needs?

Applications for partner schools are due no later than 5:00 PM EST on Friday, November 18th 2011. Please e-mail all applications to golivos@rhsmith.umd.edu. Good luck!
